BREED THEATER. "The Gold Seekers," Brilliant Biograph

Melodrama. se programme at the Breed thea-as shown to a large and enthusias-audience last evening, is a most lient one, and has as its feature striking story of the California fewer days, entitled The Gold

The disheartened gold seeker is seen, throwing his pick down, in despair, and on opening his eyes discovers the fact that he has at last located pay dirt. He hurries home to his faithful wife, who hustles him off to file his claim, while he afts by the claim, she kees to the office of the agent. Two mountain reprobates see the affair from a distance and attempt to rush abased to file the claim for themselves. They arrive at the office and find the woman there, but the agent out. Then they attempt to entice her into a cabin nearby, by appealing to her sympathy, and after getting her in, they lock her in, and rush for the agent's office to file the claim. She lowers her little child over the transom, and he runs to the nearest faffn house and gets the assistance of the men in the neighborhood, who rush to the office and stop the deal that the culprits have on.

Other Blograph features are also on and Miss Seibert sings the fetching song, All I Want Is Love, and the illustrated song, Oh, What I Won't De for a Girl Like You.

FOETRY.

Bees begin their honey hoard
With a busy buzz and boom.
New the wild phiez shows its plume,
And the mexd is golden-floored
From the dandellon loom;
You may list a lyric lay
If the sky or glow or gloom
In the merry ides of May.

Rank on rank the rushes loom;
White as foam upon a flume
Trillium nod, and wide outpoured
Is the hyacinth perfume;
Carols every breeze, "Be gay!
Cheerless cark and care entemb
In the merry ides of May.

Song is hard by field and ford;
Glints of amber touch the broom;
Topaz lights the leaves flume;
Dawn and dusk are crimson cored;
Blithesome as a bride and groom,
All the world's a primrose way,
Full of beauty, full of bloom,
In the merry ides of May.

A LETTER FROM NELL.

Than common, as though he were ill,
He brings me a note from my tailor
Inclosing an overdue bill.
But if flushed with delights are his features
Each omen of fear I dispel,
For he brings joy to one of God's creatures
